Providence Journal The record of the grad sites of the smaller colleges against that of the unites of the smaller colleges against that of the great universities is 'certainly, not so inferior as some would have us believe and some very notable examples of the success of the former are at hand. At all events we cannot admit that a small college is a sickly one or that the tendency of effort should be to increase the size and diminish the number throughout the United States. Even the feeble western colleges are not to be despised in their days of struggling weakness as they may contain the germs of future strength and sibility to be developed by the growth of the surrounding population
